

Getting things done... together

In business, you can't succeed alone. You need to work with trusted partners to help each other succeed. That's the relationship Det'on Cho Corporation, the economic development arm of the Yellowknives Dene First Nation, has with De Beers. De Beers is a committed partner that keeps its promises.

It's been five years since De Beers and the Yellowknives Dene First Nation signed an Impact Benefit Agreement (IBA) that promised to build capacity, provide job opportunities and support local Aboriginal businesses.

De Beers has lived up to its commitment - our people have been working in many different aspects of De Beers' operations: winter road security; providing camp catering and service; and now providing logistics and expediting to and from Snap Lake. In these ways, we're helping De Beers succeed, while at the same time they're helping to build capacity in the Yellowknives Dene First Nation.

This doesn't happen by chance. It happens because of the integrity of leaders like Chantal Lavoie, Ken Smith and the entire De Beers team who follow through on their commitments.
